A Meteorological Paradox

(Original)

I once knew a quiet composed of the funniest people you ever saw in your life. They weren't four men or four women nor two men and two women, but three men and a woman. Each of the three men was funnier than the other two, and the woman was funnier than the three men together. You should have seen her. One eye was turned up at an angle of twenty-five degrees, the other down at an angle of thirty. She could look serious and sympathetic out of the one eye and hysterically diabolical out of the other. She had a ravenish croak and a sweet melody in her voice, so that no one could tell whether she meant to be pleasant or disagreeable. Sometimes she would say pleasant things to you looking at you with her sympathetic eye and sometimes say diabolical things looking at you with her sympathetic eye. So nobody ever knew what she was driving at.

The first of the three men was Mr. Bantam, husband of the above described lady. Everybody said the name was very appropriate, for Mr. Bantam's face wore the perpetual grin of a bantam rooster. Next came Mr. Guyer, a theoretical mathematical prodigy. Like Sir Isaac Newton, who made a large and a small hole in his door for his big and little cat to come through, Guyer didn't stoop to consider petty contrivances. He once had an alarm clock which failed to wake him up in the morning. Somebody finally called his attention to the fact that it hadn't any bell. The third man was Mr. Merryweather, a "real noble, good man," as one of his women friends expressed it. Indeed, he was so good and noble that he couldn't conceive of any one being wicked. And thereby hangs this tale.

One Sunday morning Merryweather and Guyer went to see Mr. and Mrs. Bantam, who were at church. The two men sat on the veranda waiting till the services should be over and the couple, recharged, like an electric automobile, with goodness, should return. The weather was betwixt and between, and when Merryweather said it was warm Guyer, who was a great disputant, declared it was cold. Presently Mr. and Mrs. Bantam returned. Mrs. Bantam welcoming Guyer with her sympathetic eye and Merryweather with her diabolical eye, then passing into the house. The dispute about the weather was referred to Bantam, who concluded to refer it to the thermometer, which he brought from the house. He showed it to Merryweather, who was surprised to see a record of 90 degrees. He was much pleased to be vindicated, but hadn't expected so triumphant a vindication.

Then Mrs. Bantam came out, regarding her husband and Guyer with her sympathetic eye and Merryweather with her diabolical eye, made some modest remarks on the weather herself, in which she maintained that it was growing colder. After having established her point, at least with Bantam and Guyer—Mrs. Bantam always established her point: people were afraid that if they disagreed with her she would bring her diabolical eye on them—she went back into the house with the thermometer.

Presently Bantam went inside to get the thermometer again, and when he brought it out it had fallen 20 degrees. Merryweather couldn't understand how so decided a change should have occurred in so short a time without his feeling it. Guyer suggested that there was something the matter with him. Merryweather was frightened. He thought he had better go home.

Mrs. Bantam came out again, bringing the thermometer with her and suggesting that something must be the matter with it. It had gone up again. This reassured Merryweather, who was of too sweet a disposition to speak his thoughts, which were that Mrs. Bantam had probably read the scale first with her lower, then with her upper eye. But as there were 45 degrees between the two eyes this didn't explain the smaller difference. However, he decided to wait awhile before concluding that he had chills and fever. The consequences might have been averted had not Bantam handed round a stimulant. A few minutes after Merryweather had drained his glass Mrs. Bantam came out with the thermometer again standing at 60 degrees. Then Merryweather was sure he had the fever of pneumonia. A sympathetic curve appeared on the left hand corner of Mrs. Bantam's mouth as she remarked that it came on that way.

Merryweather was helped into the house and placed on a lounge. Occasionally he would resume a normal bodily temperature, but whenever he did so one of his three friends would show him a thermometer antipodal to his condition. If the mercury stood low when he was not hot he thought he was in fever. If it stood high when he was cool he assumed that he had a chill. In this way his loving friends kept working on his imagination and through his imagination on his body till he got up and went home to die. Once out of the way of the malign influence that had tormented him, he was surprised at a sudden recovery.

Now, the explanation of this meteorological paradox is this: Bantam before bringing the thermometer out on to the veranda to settle the dispute between Merryweather and Guyer had held the bulb in his fist. When he took it inside he gave it to Mrs. Bantam with instructions to put it in the ice chest. And so the thermometer was kept oscillating between heat and cold while Mr. Merryweather was oscillating between cold and heat till he was thrown into a condition of imaginary pneumonia.

OSCAR COX.

POINTS OF DIFFERENCE.

Public and Private Methods Contrasted—Organization vs. Aggregation.

One controlling economic reason for opposing public ownership is that every individual in society prospers just in proportion as industry gets the best there is in human capability. On the other hand, government control and direction never get and in the nature of things never can get all there is or the best there is in human capability.

Now the government may compete with private enterprise in getting capable men, but it has not thus far shown anything of the capacity of a private enterprise to assign the right man always to the right place. The agency which in private enterprise succeeds so generally in eventually landing in the right place the right man is not simply good intention or mere intelligence, but the intelligence and intention which constantly study the enterprise in hand, which make it the one affair in life, constantly thought of and planned for—an intelligence and intention, too, which are themselves as nearly as possible permanent. That kind of seeking out and watchfulness few government departments possess. The men in charge of government departments may be intelligent and well intentioned, but they are in today and out tomorrow. The thing under them is not their child. They never, as a matter of fact, get their hands and their minds fully into the work.

Nor will civil service check this. Civil service examinations may secure capable men, but no civil service examination can assign the right man to the right place, can pick out of the thousand capable men just the kind of capability that is fitted to this place and just the kind that is fitted to that. Indeed, between government control and private control the difference in that respect is almost the exact difference between what we call true organization and what is the mere aggregation, for in private enterprise each man has come by a process of attrition to the place he is best fitted to fill, while in government employment each man is dropped into his place irrespective of special fitness and under civil service is riveted there.—Hon. Peter S. Grosscup in American Magazine.

Officials Already Overloaded.

A third general objection to government agency rests on the principle of the division of labor. Every additional function undertaken by the government is a fresh occupation imposed on a body already overcharged with duties. A natural consequence is that most things are ill done, much not done at all, because the government is not able to do it without delays which are fatal to its purpose; that the more troublesome and less showy of the functions undertaken are postponed and neglected, and an excuse is always ready for the neglect, while the heads of the administration have their minds so fully taken up with official detail, in however perfunctory a manner superintended, that they have no time or thought to spare for the great interests of the state and the preparation of enlarged measures of sound improvement.—John Stuart Mill.

A Trade Union Inconsistency.

One of the anomalies of trades unionism is the demand for "closed shops" and the advocacy of municipal ownership when it is inevitable that every industry transferred from private to public ownership will become an "open shop." In public employment all conditions and wages of labor must be determined by laws and ordinances.
No law excluding nonunion men from public employment can stand the test of its constitutionality.—Public Policy.
